Synopsis
A young boy visits an island with his grandfather. Whilst his grandfather is fishing, the boy explores the island's forest. He pretends that he is going back in time and describes the types of animals, which lived there, as well as the young Aboriginal children, who may have played in the huge trees. After exploring the forest, he heads back to his grandfather, who has made a fire and is cooking the fish, which he caught. Discussion about sustainability is prompted by the closing question, "But will the forest still be there when we come back?"
